Timothy McAvoy, MD, receives Wisconsin Medical Society Directors Award

MADISON —The Wisconsin Medical Society (Society) honored Timothy McAvoy, MD, with its highest honor—the Directors Award—during its Annual Meeting April 14 in Madison.

Established in 1928, the Directors Award recognizes individuals who have served their fellow physicians and the public with outstanding distinction.

An internist from Waukesha, Dr. McAvoy has been a very active Society member for more than 30 years, serving as its president and as a member of the Board of Directors for nine years. He held numerous other leadership roles as well, including membership on the Society’s Nominating Committee and the WISMedPAC Board of Directors.

“Doctor McAvoy is someone who believes wholeheartedly in our Society, what it represents and what we can accomplish when we work together—at the local, state and national levels. And while some presidents scale back on their involvement when their term ends, Dr McAvoy has continued to be involved, mentoring the students and young physicians who will be our future leaders,” said Jerry Halverson, MD, chair of the Society’s Board of Directors. “I honestly don’t know how he’s found the time or energy to be so involved for so many years. We are indeed indebted to him for his tireless advocacy for patients and our profession.”

In addition to his involvement in the Society, Dr. McAvoy has been actively involved with the American Medical Association and the Waukesha County Medical Society, serving on its executive committee since 1985, as its president and as AMA alternate delegate for eight years and then as delegate.

With more than 12,500 members dedicated to the best interests of their patients, the Wisconsin Medical Society is the largest association of physicians in the state and a trusted source for health policy leadership since 1841.
