

Eau Claire School Board President Elected to United Nations Council of Organizations

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 12, 2018 – Members of the United Nations (UN) Council of Organizations in the United States have approved the election of Joe Luginbill to serve as their newest Council Member and Executive Committee Member.

Luginbill currently serves as the President of the Eau Claire School Board and is the youngest elected official in Eau Claire history. In addition to being elected as a member of the executive council, UN Council of Organizations members unanimously elected Luginbill to chair the council's Education Committee.

The Council of Organizations is a UN organization of more than 100 nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) with interests in education, social justice, peace and security, labor, sustainable development, human rights, and health and women's issues.

“We can't wait to have further interaction with Joe and are delighted that he will be serving in our organization.” – Carole Conors, Council Secretary

“We have an extraordinary opportunity to make meaningful contributions through the Council to Education for Global Citizenship, which is where our UN/multilateral orientation fits in.” – Aaron Etra, Council Chairperson

“I am excited for this opportunity to continue my advocacy on behalf of children and families. I am honored by the support and confidence of the council members, and look forward to representing the Chippewa Valley in this work.” – Joe Luginbill

The Council works to promote greater public awareness about global issues and the United Nations' importance in world affairs. Council members also work to strengthen the relationship between the United States and the UN.
